

A Whisper in the Wind

The forest was still, save for the gentle rustling of leaves under moonlight.

Elara tightened her cloak and stepped forward, her lantern casting trembling shadows on the moss covered stones.

Each footstep was a memory, echoing through the trees that had once heard her laughter.

Tonight, the forest listened again - to secrets, to sorrow, and to the whisper of home.